Executive Summary

This report provides an overview of how Opening Day ticket sales changed following strategic pricing adjustments, and what the resulting impacts were compared to the prior season. The analysis covers ticket class distribution, average pricing trends, site traffic, sales pacing, and season ticket proportions across price locations.

Total primary market revenue for Opening Day increased from $3,129,500 to $4,059,000 (29.7% increase). The total number of tickets sold decreased from 42,340 to 40,080.

What We Did Differently

- Season ticket volume was reduced intentionally. Decreased 4,300 from 20,500 to 16,200 (20.98% decrease)(see Ticket Class Distribution).
- Single game prices were increased significantly. Average single game price increased from $60 to $98 (62.5% increase)(see Average Pricing Opening Day).
- Group discount was eliminated.

What Happened

- Higher prices drove significant revenue growth despite lower volume. Season ticket revenue increased by $280,000 (15.38%), single primary revenue increased by $285,000 (53.77%), and single secondary revenue increased by $340,000 (77.27%)(see Ticket Class Distribution).
- Single secondary tickets rose while Group tickets declined. Single secondary tickets increased from 7,500 to 10,100 (34.67% increase) and Group tickets decreased from 2,050 to 1,580 (22.93% decrease)(see Ticket Class Distribution).
- Opening Day site traffic tracked well following the January 12th on-sale date, though overall site traffic across all games trailed prior years(see Figure 10).
- Sales paced later but held strong, with most price locations achieving similar sell-through rates to prior years by Opening Day(see Change in Sales Pacing).

Site Traffic - Opening Day Hits

Opening Day sales for this season did not open until January 12th. Despite the later on-sale date, site traffic tracked reasonably well compared to prior seasons leading up to Opening Day.

Season	Average Seat Price	Number of Seats Sold
2023	$45.50	9800
2024	$62.75	5200
2025	$60.20	7500
2026	$97.80	6400

Average Pricing Opening Day Single Game Tickets by Year (Non-Premium Only)

Since last season, the average ticket price on Opening Day for a single game ticket went up by $38 (62.5% increase). The number of seats sold went down by 1,100.

Primary Market Conversion Rates for Opening Day

This graph shows the conversion rates (number of unique buyers / number of visitors) for the Opening Day ticket page over the last 4 years. The prior season saw an increase in conversion rate from December to January as average prices decreased. This year, the conversion rate was high in January when ticket prices were also high, then dropped as ticket inventory decreased.

Change in Sales Pacing

Grandstand Corner

Single-game tickets for Opening Day in the Grandstand Corner were virtually sold out months ahead of time in years past. This year, tickets sold slower but still steadily over the months leading up to Opening Day.

The majority of price location families saw noticeable jumps in their average ticket prices on single game transactions for Opening Day. The largest increases in single game prices came from the lower-priced, high-demand sections. A small number of premium sections saw modest decreases. Nearly all price locations also saw significant increases in the season ticket value attributed to Opening Day.

Price Change vs. Sales Change Opening Day: 2025 to 2026

Despite significant price increases across most sections, the majority of price location families sold approximately the same number of Opening Day single game tickets compared to last year. Several sections sold more tickets even with higher prices, suggesting strong demand elasticity for premium events.
